In Aramaic grammar, a noun is in the emphatic (or, in some recent books, the definite) state when it has the suffix which originally served the purpose of a definite article, but in Syriac became unmeaning.

Any differences that may arise before that time will be referred to as 'states'. Ibid. 13 It is probable that copies of the book in all three states will be issued on the same day. Hence ˌstathmoki'netic a., (of a drug) that produces stathmokinesis; applied also to the method of measuring rates of cell division by means of such a drug.

1945 Bot. Rev. XI. 148 While some cells showed complete pycnosis, normal telophase stages and cytoses occurred. Some cells assumed normal telophase stages and formed giant or polyploid nuclei. Dustin proposed the name of 'stathmocinesis' for this type of indirect division and applied the name of 'stathmocinetic poison' to colchicine. In recent terminology, Statics and Kinetics (= the older Dynamics) are the two branches of Dynamics.

1871 W. S. JEVONS Theory Pol. Econ. p. viii, The nature of Wealth and Value is explained by the consideration of indefinitely small amounts of pleasure and pain, just as the theory of Statics is made to rest upon the equality of indefinitely small amounts of energy. 1891 J. N. KEYNES Scope & Method in Pol. Econ. iv. 141 In so-called economic statics we are frequently engaged in examining the effects of particular changes. 1920 A. MARSHALL Princ. Econ. (ed. 8) v. v. 366 The problem of normal value belongs to economic Dynamics: partly because Statics is really but a branch of Dynamics. 1947 P. A. SAMUELSON Foundations Econ. Analysis ii. 8 This method of comparative statics is but one special application of the more general practice of scientific deduction in which the behavior of a system (possibly through time) is defined in terms of a given set of functional equations and initial conditions. 1954 W. JAFFÉ tr. Walras's Elem. Pure Economics viii. 117 Had I supposed utility to be a variable functionally related to time, then time would have had to figure explicitly in the problem. And we should then have passed from economic statics to economic dynamics. 1963 R. E. KUENNE Theory of Gen. Econ. Equilibrium i. 15 Comparative statics is a method of employing static models analytically by imposing changes upon the data of the model. 1974 A. S. CAMPAGNA Macroeconomics iii. 50 With a model in equilibrium any change in the variables will cause the model to react until a new equilibrium is reached. The comparison of these two equilibrium states is called comparative statics.

b. stationary state (Physics), a steady state; spec. any of the stable orbits of the electrons in the Bohr model of the atom.

1900 Rep. Brit. Assoc. Adv. Sci. 634 If we are given the probability that the coordinates of the system may be between given limits, then a condition for the stationary state is that the mean values of the accelerations of $\frac{1}{2}mv^2$, $\frac{1}{2}mw^2$, $\frac{1}{2}mw^2$ are zero. 1913 N. Bohr in Phil. Mag. XXVI. 7 The dynamical equilibrium of the systems in the stationary states can be discussed by help of the ordinary mechanics, while the passing of the systems between different stationary states cannot be treated on that basis. 1932 *Jrnl. d. Statistics. Applied to a series of observations that has attained equilibrium, so that the expected value of any function of a section of it is independent of the time for which it has been running.

1938 H. Wold Stud. in Analysis of Stationary Time Series 1 Observational series which describe phenomena changing with time may be roughly classified in two broad categories, viz. evolutive and stationary. Ibid., Stationary time series are unchanging in respect to their general structure. d. A tradesman who sells writing materials and similar articles. Cf. LAW-STATIONER.

The sale of parchment, paper, pens, ink, etc. was originally a regular branch of the business of the 'stationer' or bookseller. The restriction of the term stationer to the dealer in these articles is first evidenced in quot. 1656; it had probably been in vogue in accurate mercantile parlance some time before, but was not established in ordinary use until the 18th century. Phillips (ed. Kersey 1706) s.v. Stationers, has the term paper-stationer.

1656 BLOUNT Glossogr., Stationer..is often confounded with Book-seller, and sometimes with Book-binder; whereas they are three several Trades; the Stationer sells Paper and Paper-Books, Ink, Wax, etc. The Book-seller deals onely in printed Books, ready bound; and the Book-binder binds them, but sells not. Yet all three are of the Company of Stationers. 1755 JOHNSON, Stationer,..2. f. the Company of Stationers (or the Stationers' Company): one of the Livery Companies of the City of London, founded in 1556, comprising booksellers, printers, bookbinders, and dealers in writing materials, etc. Stationers' Hall: the hall of the Stationer's Company, at which a register of copyrights is kept. (The Copyright Act of 1842 provided that no action for breach of copyright could be brought unless the work had been entered in this register. The Copyright Act of 1911 abolished this rule.)

The charter of 1556 (ed. 1741, p. 6) is thus worded: 'Volumus, damus, et concedimus..Thomæ Dockwray..[names of the Wardens and Freemen] Liberis Hominibus Misteræ sive Artis Stationarii Civitatis Nostre Londinensis quod de cetero sint..Unum Corpus de se in perpetuum [etc]'.

The earliest known occurrence of the word seems to be in the title of the satirical work Microscopium Statisticum, by 'Helenus Politanus', Frankfort (?), 1672. Here the sense is prob. 'pertaining to statists or to statecraft' (cf. statistical a. 1). The earliest use of the adj. in anything resembling its present meaning is found in mod.L. statisticum collegium, said to have been used by Martin Schmeizel (professor at Jena, died 1747) for a course of lectures on the constitutions, resources, and policy of the various States of the world. The G. statistik was used as a name for this department of knowledge by G. Achenwall in his Vorbereitung zur Staatswissenschaft (1748); the context shows that he did not regard the term as novel. The F. statistique sb. is cited by Littré from Bachaumont (died 1771); Fr. writers of the 18th c. refer to Achenwall as having brought the word into use. The sense-development of the word may have been influenced by the notion that it was a direct derivative of L. status state sb.]

But the consequence of such change was to maintain from the indefinite past to the indefinite future an overall, constant equilibrium in the terrestrial economy. 1978 P. MARSH et. al. Rules of Disorder iv. 112 Evidence for the existence of a 'steady-state' system of rules and a sense of social propriety.

b. Astr. Used with reference to any cosmological theory which embraces the principle that on a large scale the universe is essentially unchanging in time and space; spec. the theory propounded by Bondi, Gold, and Hoyle of an isotropic universe expanding at a constant rate, with matter being continuously created so that mean density of the universe remains constant.

1948 BONDI & GOLD in Monthly Notices R. Astron. Soc. CVIII. 252 (heading) The steady-state theory of the expanding universe. 1955 Sci. News XXXVII. 22 The steady-state theory was designed to overcome a difficulty in the world-models of general relativity which no longer exists. Until a few years ago it was thought that these gave a value for the age of the universe..which was too small to satisfy other astrophysical evidence. 1969 Times 23 June 6/7 The steady state theory..says that the universe looks roughly the same from any position and at any time in the past, present or future. 1971 J. Z. YOUNG *Introd. NARLIKAR Struct. Universe iv. 132 With the help of the PCP [Perfect Cosmological Principle], Bondi and Gold were able to deduce a number of important properties of the steady-state Universe. As we shall see.., they were able to deduce that such a Universe must continually expand. 1978 PASACHOFF & KUTNER University Astron. xxix. 732 If we have indeed discovered radiation from the big bang itself then clearly the steady state theory is discredited.

Hence steady-stater, an advocate of a steady-state theory of the universe.

6. a. The vapour into which water is converted when heated. In popular language, applied to the visible vapour which floats in the air in the form of a white cloud or mist, and which consists of minute globules or vesicles of liquid water suspended in a mixture of gaseous water and air. (Also sometimes applied to the vapour arising from other liquids when heated.) In modern scientific and technical language, applied only to water in the form of an invisible gas.

The invisible 'steam', in the modern scientific sense, is, when its temperature is lowered, converted into the white vapour called 'steam' in popular language, and this under continued cooling, becomes 'water' in the liquid form.

I. 1. a. A general name for certain artificially produced varieties of iron, distinguished from those known as 'iron' by certain physical properties, esp. greater hardness and elasticity, which render them suitable as material for cutting instruments, and for various other industrial purposes.

Chemically steel is a nearly pure iron, the proportion of other substances varying from less than 1 to 3 per cent. Formerly 'steel' could be defined as containing more carbon than wrought iron, and less than cast iron; but since about 1860 the name has been extended to certain products containing very little carbon. With a few exceptions the term is now usu. restricted to iron alloys containing not more than 1·7% carbon.

steelbow[2] ('sti:lbəʊ). Sc. Law. Obs. exc. Hist. Forms: 5–6 steil-, 6 stele-, 7 steelbow. [f. STEEL sb.[1] + BOW[3].

It corresponds to the F. cheptel de fer (see Littré), lit. 'iron farm-stock', and to early mod.G. stählin vieh, eisern vieh (in German Law Latin pecora chalybea, ferrea), and obs. Da. jernfæ. These terms denote the quantity of live stock which a farming tenant receives from his landlord on entering, under a contract to restore the same quantity and value at the end of his tenancy. This is precisely the sense of steelbow, exc. that the Sc. term seems to have been extended to apply to dead as well as live stock. The F. cheptel de fer is also used, like steelbow, for the species of tenure or contract under which cattle are so held by a tenant. In early mod.Ger. there were other legal terms containing the adjs. stählin 'made of steel', eisern 'made of iron', in the figurative sense 'rigidly fixed in amount': e.g. stähline gült, a fixed regular payment or income: stähline pfründe, a church living subject to no deductions. The figure of speech doubtless comes down from very early Germanic legal formulæ; but evidence is wanting. See Schilter Glossarium, s.v. Stal; also Grimm Deutsche Rechtsaltertümer (ed. 4, 1899) II. 131.]

steep (sti:p), v.[1] Forms: 5–6 stepe, stipe, 5–7 steepe, 6 stiep(e, stype, (steyp), pa. pple. stept, 6–7 steap, 6– steep. [Of difficult etymology. On the assumption that (notwithstanding the late date at which it is recorded) the vb. represents an OE. stíepan*, stépan*, it would be the formal equivalent of Sw. stöpa, Da. støbe, Norw. støypa, to steep (seeds, barley for malting):—OTeut. type staupjan*, perhaps f. staupo-m* (OE. stéap, ON. staup, STOUP) vessel for liquor. Cf. Norw. setja korn i staup = to put corn in steep (see STEEP sb.[1]).

The mod. Scandinavian words cited coincide in form with a verb meaning to cast down, to cast (metals), to run (candles, etc.) into a mould, which descends from ON. støypa of the same meaning, a causative of ON. stú pa (once), Sw. stupa to STOOP. It is phonologically impossible that, as is usually supposed, the Eng. word can be a. ON. støypa: and even if it be referred to an OE. stíepan* corresponding to the ON. vb., the development of sense appears less natural on this view than on that suggested above.]

Stefan ('stɛfæn). Physics. The name of Josef Stefan (1835–93), Austrian physicist, used attrib. and in the possessive with reference to a law discovered by him (see J. Stefan 1879, in Sitzungsber. der Österreich. Akad. der Wissensch. in Wien LXXIX. 391), as Stefan('s) constant, law = Stefan-Boltzmann constant, law (see next).

1898 Sci. Abstr. I. 391 The author's attempt to realise Kirchhoff's conception of an equivalent to an absolutely black body in the shape of a uniformly heated hollow space with a small opening, and test Stefan's law, which maintains that the radiation of such a body is proportional to the 4th power of its absolute temperature. 1923 GLAZEBROOK Dict. Appl. Physics III. 711/1 By the Stefan-Boltzmann law.., and a knowledge of Stefan's constant, the whole radiation from the blackened surface is known. Ibid. IV. 569/1 Apart from this constant Stefan's law leads straight to Maxwell's law of radiation pressure. 1962 Newnes Conc. Encycl. Electr. Engin. 718/1 Here ϵ is the Stefan or total-radiation constant. 1966 [see Planck('s) equation s.v. PLANCK]. 1979 T. B. AKRILL et. al. Physics xxviii. 377/2 For a non-black or 'grey' body we can apply Stefan's law in the form $P_{tot} = \epsilon\sigma AT^4$, where ϵ is called the total emissivity of the body and is a number always less than 1.

Stefan-Boltzmann ('stɛfæn 'bəʊltsmən). Physics. The names of Josef Stefan (see prec.) and Ludwig Eduard Boltzmann (1844–1906), Austrian physicists, used attrib. with reference to a law independently discovered by them (L. E. Boltzmann 1884, in Ann. der Physik u. Chemie XXII. 291; see also prec.), as Stefan-Boltzmann constant, the constant in the Stefan-Boltzmann law, equal to $5{\cdot}67 \times 10^{-8}$ J m^{-2} s^{-1} K^{-4}·; Stefan-Boltzmann law, the law which states that the total radiation emitted by a black body is proportional to the fourth power of its absolute temperature.

1898 Sci. Abstr. I. 391 The Stefan-Boltzmann law is confirmed to within 3 to 8%. 1915 R. A. HOUSTOUN Treat. Light xxv. 448 By considering such a cycle Boltzmann proved that the total radiation from a black body was proportional to the fourth power of its absolute temperature. This law had been stated previously but erroneously by Stefan as holding good for all bodies, and as the amended version was due to Boltzmann, it is very often referred to as the Stefan-Boltzmann law. 1954 [see LANGLEY]. 1958 CONDON & ODISHAW Handbk. Physics VI. i. 15/1 The total radiation crossing unit area in unit time in all directions in one hemisphere is usually written σT^4, where σ is called the Stefan-Boltzmann constant. 1977 I. M. CAMPBELL Energy & Atmosphere i. 13 This is related to T through the Stefan-Boltzmann law: $E(T) = \sigma T^4$ where σ is known as the Stefan- Boltzmann constant and has value $5{\cdot}672 \times 10^{-8}$ for T in Kelvin and $E(T)$ in Wm^{-2}.

steine, obs. form of STAIN.

Steiner ('ʃtaɪnə(r)). Math. The name of Jakob Steiner (1796–1863), Swiss geometer, used attrib. and in the possessive to designate various mathematical concepts suggested by him: a. Steiner triple or triplet system (see quot. 1939); so Steiner triplet; also Steiner system, a generalization of the triple system to other numbers (see quot. 1974). [Steiner first described such systems in Jrnl. f. d. reine u. angewandte Math. (1853) XLV. 181.]

1939 R. C. Bose in Annals Eugenics IX. 354 Steiner (1853) proposed the problem of arranging N things in triplets, such that every pair occurs in just one and only one triplet. Such an arrangement may be called a simple triple system or a Steiner's triplet system. 1963 H. J. Ryser Combinatorial Math. viii. 100 The Steiner triple system of order 7 is the same as the projective plane of order 2 in the preceding chapter. 1966 Annali di Matematica LXXI. 199 The Steiner system $S(5, 8, 24)$ is an arrangement of 24 elements in sets of 8, such that any 5 of the elements belong to exactly one set. 1974 I. Anderson First Course Combinatorial Math. vii. 102 A Steiner system $S(l, m, n)$ is a collection of m-element subsets of an n element set B such that every l-element subset of B lies in exactly one of the m-element sets. Ibid., A Steiner triple system is an $S(2, 3, n)$ for some n. 1980 Sci. Amer. May 14/2 Since Steiner triplets are not ordered, the solution is of course unique.

b. Used with reference to the problem of finding the set of line segments of minimum total length needed to connect a given set of points in a metric space.

1941 Courant & Robbins What is Math.? vii. 359 In Steiner's problem three fixed points A, B, C are given. It is natural to generalize this problem to the case of n given points. Ibid. 360 To find the really significant extension of Steiner's problem we must abandon the search for a single point P... Given n points..to find a connected system of straight line segments of shortest total length such that any two of the given points can be joined by a polygon consisting of segments of the system. 1961 Canad. Math. Bull. IV. 143 Given a triangle T with the vertices a_1, a_2, a_3, to find in the plane of T the point p which minimizes the sum of the distances $|pa_1| + |pa_2| + |pa_3|$. p, called the Steiner point of T, is unique. 1968 SIAM Jrnl. Appl. Math. XVI. 1 A Steiner minimal tree for given points $A_1, \ldots, An$ in the plane is a tree which interconnects these points using lines of shortest possible total length. In order to achieve minimum length the Steiner minimal tree may contain other vertices (Steiner points) beside $A_1, \ldots An$. 1979 Sci. Amer. Apr. 37/1 First is the Steiner problem of the shortest roads linking many cities.

Steinerian (staɪ'nɪərɪən), a. and sb. Math. [f. Steiner (see prec.) + -IAN.] a. adj. Pertaining to the discoveries of Jakob Steiner. Steinerian polygon, a figure composed of a number of vertices with connecting lines. b. sb. The locus of points whose first polars with respect to a given curve have double points.

Coxeter et al. Fifty-Nine Icosahedra i. 1 We enumerate and describe the polyhedra that can be five Platonic solids by stellation, i.e., by extending or 'producing' the faces until they meet again, always preserving the rotational symmetry of the original solid. 1948 —— Regular Polytopes xiv. 264 The first stellation of {5, 3, 3} is constructed by stellating the 720 pentagons into $\{\frac{5}{2}\}$'s, and the 120 dodecahedra into $\{\frac{5}{2}, 5\}$'s. stem (stɛm), sb.[2] Naut. Forms: 1 stefn, stefna or -ne, stemn, 5–6 steme, 6–7 stemme, 7 stemb, 7–8 stemm, 6– stem. [OE. stęmn, stęfn str. masc. (also stęfna wk. masc. or stęfne wk. fem.), originally a specific application of stem sb.[1] in the sense 'tree-trunk'. The nautical use occurs (sometimes with differentiated form) in several Teut. langs.: OFris. stevene (WFris. stjûwn, NFris. stēven), Du., LG. steven (whence G. steven; MDu. had also steve), OS. stamn, ON. stafn, stamn masc. (whence ME. stam sb.[1]), Da. stavn, also (? from LG.) stævn, Sw. (? from LG.) stäf.

After the OE. period the native word does not occur in our quots. until late in the 15th c., though the 14th and 15th c. have several examples of stam (from the equivalent ON. form) and of the compound forestam. The native form must of course have been preserved in oral tradition alongside the Scandinavian form, which disappears in the 15th c. A few examples of steven are found in Sc. writers of the 16th c.; whether this descends from OE. stęfn, or a late adoption from LG. or Du., cannot be determined.]

Forms: α. 1 steppan, North. steppa, stepa, 3 steppen, (stepen), 3–7 steppe, 3– step. β. 1 stæppan, 3–5 stappe, stap, 4–5 stapp, stape, 7– Sc. stap. Pa. t. α. 1 stóp, pl. stópon, 3–4 stop, pl. stopen. β. 3 step, steap, steop, pl. stepen, 3–4 stepe. γ. 3–5 stap, 5 stappe. δ. weak forms. 3–4 stapte, 4–5 stapped, -id, 6 stepte, 7 step'd, 7– stepp'd, 5– stept, stepped. Pa. pple. α. 1 (be)stapen, 4–5 stape(n. β. 4–5 stope(n, 6 ystope. γ. 6 step, steppte, 6– stept, stepped. [A Com. WGer. strong verb, with j- present-stem (cf. SHAPE v.). The original conjugation (OTeut. type stapjan*, stōp-, stapan-) is completely evidenced only in English and Frisian: OE. stæppan, stęppan, pa. t. stóp, pa. ppl. (be)stapen, corresponds to OFris. steppa* (3rd sing. stepth, stapth, subj. steppe), pa. t. stôp, pa. pple. stapen. The present-stem is normally represented also in OHG. stephen (MHG. stepfen), and WFlem. steppen; the strong pa. t. in OS. stôp and in WFris. stoep, which is the only trace of the strong inflexion surviving in any mod.Teut. dialect. The continental WGer. langs. have a synonymous wk. vb. with pp and without umlaut, (M)LG., (M)Du. stappen, mod.Fris. stappe, OHG. staphôn (MHG., mod.G. stapfen):—WGer. stappōjan*, where the doubled p appears to be due to derivation from the sb. WGer. stappon-* (see STEP sb.[1]); in LG. and Du., however, the history of the form may be complicated with that of the original j-present.

In OE. the normal form stęppan was Anglian, while WS. had the form stæppan, the anomalous vowel of which has not been satisfactorily accounted for. In ME. the forms with a are confined to certain southern writers (cf. mod.Somerset staap). The present Sc. stap, recorded from the 17th c., appears to be a late development.

The normal strong pa. t. and pa. pple. survive into the 14th and 15th centuries, but beside them appear two analogical formations: steop, stepen, app. modelled on the reduplicating verbs (cf. the similar development in MDu. stiep pa. t.); and stap, stappe of uncertain origin. Beside the regular stapen there is also a new pa. pple. stopen. Weak forms are found from the end of the 13th century, and from the 16th century are universal.

The affinities of the Teut. root stap-* are uncertain. On the assumption that the form with single p has been altered by some analogy from stapp-*, with pp representing Indogermanic pn, possible cognates are OSl. (and Russian) stopa, step, pace, stepeni step, degree.]

step, var. STAP Sc. and north., stave of a tub.

step-, OE. stéop- (earlier stéup-, Northumb. stéap-), corresponding to OFris. stiap-, stiep- (NFris. stjap-, sjap-, stîp-, WFris. stiep-), MLG. (irreg.) stêf- (mod. LG. staif-), (M)Du. (irreg.) stief-, OHG. stiuf- (MHG., mod.G. stief-), ON. stjúp-, (MSw. stiup-, stiuf-; mod.Sw. stiuf-, styf-; Da. stif-, stiv-, now superseded by sted-):—OTeut. steupo-*; a Com. Teut. combining element (not recorded in Gothic), prefixed to terms of relationship (as son, father, brother) to form designations for the degrees of affinity resulting from the remarriage of a widowed parent. The primitive sense of the word is indicated by the use of OE. stéopbearn, -cild (STEPBAIRN, STEPCHILD) for 'orphan', and by the cognates, OE. ástieped bereaved, OHG. stiufen (also ar-, bistiufen) to bereave. Etymologically, stepfather (stepmother) might be rendered 'one who becomes a father (mother) to an orphan', and stepson (stepdaughter) 'an orphan who becomes a son (a daughter)' by the marriage of the surviving parent. It is uncertain which of these two applications of the prefix is the original one; all branches of Teut. (exc. Gothic) have both, and also the extended use in stepbrother, stepsister. ON. had shortened forms, stjúpa stepmother, stjúp-r (mod.Icel. stjúpi) stepson. In Du. and LG., and in later Scandinavian, the p of OTeut. steupo-* is anomalously represented by f instead of p. This is prob. not due to HG. influence, but to assimilation to the following f in the compound stepfather (cf. the early ME. form steffadyr). A solitary OE. example of this anomaly occurs in the form stéfdohtor (quot. 912 s.v. STEP-DAUGHTER). Occasional forms of the prefix in ME. are stip- (styp-), sti-, ste-, stappe-.

In 1755 Johnson says that stepmother is the only one of the compounds of step- that has survived in general use. At the present day stepfather is hardly less frequently used, and stepson, -daughter, -child, -brother, -sister are by no means rare, while stepdame occurs in somewhat archaistic language (chiefly fig.). In the 16th and 17th c. a few writers employed the prefix in nonce-formations which would now seem un-English, as step-devil, a term of abhorrence for a stepmother; step-duchess, the stepmother of a duke's children; step-lord, one who has the position of a lord without the true lord's affection for his subjects; step-Tully, one who assumes the function of a Cicero. New formations with the prefix, denoting actual relations of affinity, do not appear earlier than the 19th c.; in the latter part of the century they became somewhat common, chiefly as more or less jocular nonce-words, though one or two of them, as step-nephew, -niece, have obtained some currency in serious use.

The concept of orphanage has recently ceased to be essential to the meaning of the step- combinations. Consequently, the relationships of step-brother, -sister, etc., may be considered to refer reciprocally to children of a later as well as a former marriage: i.e. step-brother = half-brother, etc. A step-parent may be created by marriage to a divorced or a bereaved person.

The older compounds of step- are in this Dictionary treated as main words; the following examples illustrate the extended applications of the prefix from the 16th c. onwards.

ster, obs. form of STAR, STEER, STIR.

-ster, suffix. Forms: 1 -istræ, -estre, later -ystre, -istre, 2–4 -estre, 4–5 -estir, 5 -ister, 4–7 -star(e, 4–5 -estere, -stere, 4– -ster. [Corresponding to MLG. -(e)ster, (M)Du. and mod.Fris. -ster, it represents a WGer. type -strjōn-, forming feminine agent-nouns, prob. a derivative of the OTeut. -stro- forming nouns of action, as in ON. bakstr masc., act of baking, OHG. galstar neut., incantation.

The existence of the suffix is not attested for High German, OS. or OFris.; the supposed examples sometimes cited, OHG. wagastria lance, agalastra (OS. agastria) magpie, OS. hamstra marmot, ramestra some plant, are very doubtful; even if the suffix be formally identical with the agential suffix, it has not the same function. In Du. -ster regularly forms feminine agent-nouns corresponding to masculines in -er, e.g. schrijfster fem. of schrijver a writer. In MLG., and in mod.Fris., although most of the nouns in -ster are fem., several occur as masc., e.g. MLG. bedriegster deceiver, NFris. grewster gravedigger, wäwster weaver.

In the original types of the formation the suffix was prob. preceded by the thematic vowel of the word to which it was attached, thus becoming -astrjōn-, -istrjōn-, ? -ustrjōn-. In the historical forms, however, there is no evidence of this (unless in the OE. byrdistræ: see below); in Du. and Fris. the suffix is -ster without prefixed vowel; in MLG. usually -ster, sometimes -ester, app. merely for euphony. In OE. it is -estre, which does not produce umlaut, though it is often added to a stem containing an umlaut-vowel.]

In OE. -estre was freely used to form fem. agent-nouns, in exactly the same manner in which -ere (-ER[1]) was used to form masc. agent-nouns. Thus it was appended to the pres.-stems of verbs, as in lǽrestre female teacher, hoppestre female dancer, and to certain monosyllabic nouns of action as in sangestre songstress, séamestre sempstress, lybbestre female poisoner or witch. In a few instances fem. agent-nouns were formed by the substitution of -estre for the masc. suffix -a (:—-jon-), as in bigengestre fem. of bigenga cultivator, worshipper, webestre (WEBSTER) beside webbe as fem. of webba weaver. Lattéow, leader, functionally an agent-n. though without agential suffix, gave rise to a fem. lættewestre. An anomalous formation is huntiʒestre (instead of huntestre*) huntress which occurs once as a variant reading for hunticge.

In OE. the suffix may be said to have retained its original function, for the few instances in which it is used as a masculine are renderings of Latin designations of men exercising functions which among the English were peculiar to women, as byrdistræ embroiderer (gl. blaciarius, primicularius), bæcestre baker (gl. pistor), séamestre tailor (gl. sartor), wæscestre washer (gl. fullo).

In northern ME., however, perh. owing to the frequent adoption by men of trades like weaving, baking, tailoring, etc., the suffix came very early to be used, indiscriminately with -ER[1], as an agential ending irrespective of gender; thus in the Cursor Mundi (a 1300) demestre (see DEMPSTER) appears instead of demere (DEEMER), a judge, bemestre instead of bemer a trumpeter. It is probable that -ster was often preferred to -er as more unambiguously referring to the holder of a professional function, as distinguished from the doer of an occasional act. In Scotland, baxter and webster survived as masculines down to the 19th c. The only word of this formation that in Scotland has remained exclusively feminine is SEWSTER.

In the south the suffix continued to be predominantly feminine throughout the ME. period. The OE. formations, baxter, seamster, tapster, were in southern English usually feminine before 1500; many new designations of occupation, originally feminine, arose in ME. as bellringestre, hordestre treasurer (Winteney Rule St. Benet, 13th c.), hotestre fem. of hotere commander (Ayenbite), brewster, dyester, litster, throwster, huckster; also spinster, which alone of the group has survived (though with change of sense) solely as a feminine. A few feminines in -estere were formed to correspond to masculines in -er(e of French origin: fruitestere, tumbestere, tumblestere, wafrestere. As a feminine suffix of purely agential import, -ster was in the 14th c. still used for new formations by some writers, but was generally replaced by the French -eresse. Thus MS. Bodl. 277 of the Wyclif Bible has chesister, daunster, dwelster, weilster, where other copies have cheseresse, daunseresse (leperesse), dwelleresse, weileresse.

From the 16th c. onwards the older words in -ster, so far as they survived, have been regarded as masculines, and several of them have given rise to feminines in -ess, as backstress, seamstress, songstress, huckstress. In the modern English period the suffix has been very productive, but it is doubtful whether any of the new formations are really derived from verbs; in every instance in which this would be formally possible there is a sb. of the same form as the vb., and the derivative is (in present feeling at least) associated rather with the sb. than the vb. so in gamester, rhymester (late 16th c.), drugster (1611; but cf. druggister), and the much later dabster, jokester, punster, trickster, tipster. The formation here imitates that of trade designations; hence the disparaging sense, e.g. in rhymester, jokester, as compared with rhymer, joker. An anomalous use is that in rubster (17th c.) something used to rub with.

In the 16th c. two formations on adjs. occur: youngster (after which oldster was formed later) and lewdster.

stereobate (ˈstɛriːəʊbeɪt). Arch. [= F. stéréobate, It. stereobate, ad. L. stereobata, ad. Gr. *στερεοβάτης, f. στερεός solid + -βάτης as in στυλοβάτης STYLOBATE] A solid mass of masonry serving as a base for a wall or a row of columns. (See also quots.)

The term occurs only once in ancient use (Vitruvius III. iii). Vitruvius explains it as a massive wall built from the ground as a support for a row of columns. Modern writers (Latin in the 15–16th c., Italian, French, and English) have used it in various applications. According to some, stereobate is the generic term for a basement either under a wall or a row of columns, and a 'stylobate' is a stereobate of which the superstructure is columnar. Others restrict stereobate to the basement of a wall, as distinguished from stylobate, a basement under a row of columns. Others, again, use stereobate for the whole basement, and stylobate for the upper portion of this, which is added when there are columns.

1836 PARKER Gloss. Archit. (1840) 206 Stylobate, Stereobate, the basement or substructure of a temple below the columns. a 1840 HOSKING Archit. in *Encycl. It is sought to make a distinction between this term and Stylobate q.v., by restricting the latter to its real import, and applying stereobate to a basement in the absence of columns. 1875 Encycl. Brit. II. 441/1 [Italian Architecture.] A basement is either a low stereobate or a lofty story, according as it is intended to support a single ordinance [etc.].

Hence stereo'batic a., pertaining to or having the character of a stereobate.

'stereoblock. Chem. [ad. It. stereoblocchi (G. Natta et al. 1957, in Chim. e Industr. XXXIX. 276/2): see STEREO- and BLOCK sb.] A segment of a polymer chain possessing stereoregularity. Also attrib., as stereoblock polymer, a polymer the chains of which contain such segments.

1957 Chem. Abstr. LI. 12536 New linear high polymers of α-olefins are described which are distinguished by the presence within the macromol. of chain portions of different steric configurations. Designated 'stereoblock' polymers.., these differ from the block copolymers in that the former are obtained by polymerization of a single type of monomer. 1959 GAYLORD & MARK Linear & Stereoregular Addition Polymers 483 As originally defined by Natta, stereoblock polymers of α-olefins are polymers consisting of macromolecules containing crystallizable segments having isotactic structure and noncrystallizable segments. Actually, these macromolecules may consist either of both isotactic and atactic segments or of adjacent isotactic segments having different steric configuration... In practice, amorphous polymers, considered as atactic, may contain very short stereoblocks. 1979 C. H. BAMFORD in R. N. STEREO- + REGULAR a.] Of a polymer: having each substituent atom or group on the main polymer chain oriented in the same manner on the chain with respect to the neighbouring atoms or groups. Of a reaction: giving rise to such a polymer.

stereoscope (ˈstɛriːəʊskəʊp, often ˈstɪəriːəʊ-). [f. Gr. στερεό-ς solid + -SCOPE.]

1. An instrument for obtaining, from two pictures (usually photographs) of an object, taken from slightly different points of view (corresponding to the positions of the two eyes), a single image giving the impression of solidity or relief, as in ordinary vision of the object itself.

In the original form of the instrument (reflecting stereoscope), invented by Wheatstone, the images were combined by means of mirrors placed at a suitable angle; the common form (refracting or lenticular stereoscope), invented afterwards by Brewster, has two tubes each containing a lens, through which the two pictures are viewed by the corresponding eyes.

stereoselective (ˌstɛriːəʊ-, ˌstɪəriːəʊsɪˈlɛktɪv), a. Chem. [f. STEREO- + SELECTIVE a.] Of a reaction: producing a particular stereoisomeric form of the product preferentially, irrespective of the configuration of the reactant; = STEREOSPECIFIC a. 1 a.

Orig. (quot. 1957) = STEREOSPECIFIC a. 2.

1957 *Jrnl. Amer. Chem. A stereoselective process is one in which there is no relationship between the configuration of the reactant and that of product but one in which there is a definite driving force for forming one of the possible stereoisomeric products. 1962 E. L. ELIEL Stereochem. Carbon Compounds xv. 436 All stereospecific processes are stereoselective, but not all stereoselective processes are stereospecific. For example, the low-temperature free-radical addition of hydrogen bromide to the 2-bromo-2-butenes..is both stereospecific and stereo-selective in that the cis olefin gives meso-2,3-dibromobutane whereas the trans olefin gives the dl-dibromide. At higher temperature the reaction is still stereoselective (formation of 75% dl isomer to 25% meso isomer) but no longer stereospecific; both olefins now give the same product mixture. 1968 [see STEREOSPECIFIC a. 2]. 1979 *Canad. 2. Of a reaction or process: yielding a product, or having a rate, that depends on the particular stereoisomeric form of the starting material.

1959, 1962 [see STEREOSELECTIVE a.]. 1968 I. L. FINAR Org. Chem. (ed. 4). Ordericus Vitalis (a 1145) has in Latin libræ sterilensium, and libræ sterilensis monetæ, as if he took the word for an -ing derivative of a place-name. The Anglo-Latin sterlingus is cited by Ducange from the year 1180. Continental examples are frequent in the 13th c., the excellence of the English penny having procured for it extensive currency in foreign countries; in Oct. 1202, Baldwin Count of Flanders contracts to pay to certain Venetian nobles 'the sum of 121 ounces in marks sterling (marcas sterlinorum) at the rate of 13 "solidi" and 4 "denarii" for each silver mark' (Rawdon Brown, Cal. State Papers, Venice I. 1).

The word, if of English origin, presumably was descriptive of some peculiar characteristic of the new Norman penny. The most plausible explanation is that it represents a late OE. steorling,* 'coin with a star' (f. steorra star), some of the early Norman pennies having on them a small star. An old conjecture is that the word is derived from stær a starling (STARE sb.[1]), and alludes to the four birds (usually called 'martlets') on some coins of Edward the Confessor; but if this were so the early form would normally have been starling. Until recently, the prevailing view was that the word was a shortening of EASTERLING. Walter de Pinchebek (c 1300) gives this explanation, saying that the coin was originally made by Easterling moneyers; but the stressed first syllable would not have been dropped.

In Scotland the word was confused with the name of the town of Stirling, anciently Strivelin; hence the β forms common in the 15th and 16th centuries.]
